

Transcribed by Sally Cook
Verified by John Fitzgerald and Abby Gratz

22 [printed]

Reports

Merrifield

Junior Class.

I submit herewith my annual report, sharing the number & condition of the classes under my instruction, the subjects pursued and the nature and amount of instruction given [sic]. Latin. Instruction was given in Latin to two members of the Junior Class. Comprising the arts section, three hours per week during the Fall & Spring terms. The text used during the Fall term was [Jureuuals] Satires & during the Spring term was Plinn's letters. Slight attention was given to the application of grammatical rules further than to call attention to such constructions denoted from the usages of the writers of the Augustan Period. Special stress was laid upon the style of the two writers read. the manners and customs of the time and the leading events of contemporaneous history. In connection with Plinn's Letters, slight reading in the class was introduced so far as was found practicable.

Greek. The Arts Section of the Junior class read the Apology and portions of the Critic of Plato three hours a week during the winter term. A consideration of the peculiarities of Construction, an analysis of the argument of the Apology and a study of the Constitution of the Athenian State, with special reference to the Judicial System, were made special features of the instruction

History and Constitution

Sophomore
Class

Instruction in English history, having special reference to the growth of the English Constitution, was given to the Arts section of the class two hours per week during the first half of the year. The period covered was that from the accession of Edward III to the Victorian Era inclusive Instruction has been given [sic] in the Constitution of the United States two hours per week during the latter half of the year to the Arts section of the class and since the illness of Prof Montgomery to the entire class. The catalogue as revised a year ago removed Greek from the Senior Prep Freshman & Sophomore Classes and relegated it as an optional study to the Junior & Senior years. At the earnest request of the parents of students who had begun the study of Greek and with the consent of the Regents, the study of Greek by the students of the Freshman & Sophomore Classes was resumed in Nov<sup>r</sup> last In order to provide the desired instruction in that subject, it was found necessary to consolidate the Greek and Latin of the Sophomore

Note: Unsure of word in brackets